Customer Reviews

Daphne Carnegie has been a maiolica practitioner and teacher for over 25 years. She is currently teaching at City and Islington College. She is also the author of the highly regarded Tin-glazed Earthenware, also published by A & C Black.

Although I anticipated this book I was disappointed because the majority of the recipes contained lead. The variety of artists I did enjoy. A couple of the recipes (USA artists) had different amounts or cone temps. from those I found in Ceramic Arts Daily or on the internet. Short of emailing the artists, how can one rely on which published recipe is true? I think one could include this as a library book for there is a level of inspiration gleaned.

This is a thorough informative book for maiolica with beautiful illustrations.
