Dr. Smith received his medical degree from the University of California, San Francisco. Following his residency and board certification in Internal Medicine he developed a subspecialty in Behavioral Medicine. He has chaired national conferences and curriculum committees in these fields. Previously he practiced primary care medicine in Washington, DC, and in Korea. Â Kathryn J. Gordon has thirty-eight years of professional experience in corporate and internal communications, public relations, marketing communications, media relations, and publications management. She currently serves as managing editor and a member of the board of directors of Covenant Communications, Inc., a Utah-based publishing company. Prior to her current position, she was press secretary for a U.S. Congressman; vice-president of a Salt Lake City publishing company; manager of internal communications for software manufacturer Novell, Inc.; director of public relations for a private college in Salt Lake City; and held communications management positions at a variety of national and international corporations.

Absolutely amazing book; I am so happy I was introduced to this topic through my master's program. If you want to learn more about our mind-body connection and how we can help heal ourselves and others, this is a must read. I am often annoyed with textbooks because they're boring to read or filled with grammatical errors. This book is definitely one of a kind in the psychology world. Love, love, love!

I like the book because it is really gave indepth explanation of every topic outline. It a met its requirements as recommended textbook for my course.

Really interesting content but some chapters get redundant.

The seller provided a good product.

GOOD.

Good book. Used as expected.

Good rental book, some bent corners and some under lined words in a few chapters. Overall a really good idea, glad I went with rental over buying the book.

Excellent
