Parlamentarische Demokratie In Der Europäischen Union: Der Beitrag Des Europäischen Parlaments Und Der Nationalen Parlamente (German Edition)

Synopsis

Die Studie untersucht die dem Europäischen Parlament und den nationalen Parlamenten der EU-Mitgliedstaaten zugestandenen und von ihnen genutzten Optionen zur Kontrolle und Mitgestaltung europäischer Politik. Grundfrage ist, in welcher Form und unter welchen Umfeldbedingungen den beiden parlamentarischen Ebenen Anreizstrukturen geöffnet wurden, die zur substantiellen Reduzierung des Demokratiedefizits in der EU beitragen. Die Studie zieht hierzu die im Maastrichter Vertrag erstmals angelegte Verknüpfung der beiden Parlamentsebenen als Ausgangspunkt einer in dieser Form neuartigen Untersuchung heran. Analysiert werden Chancen und Grenzen eines europäischen Mehrebenenparlamentarismus. Die Studie bietet hierzu die erste empirisch gesättigte Grundlage. Andreas Maurer ist Professor für Politikwissenschaft und Europäische Integration an der Universität Innsbruck. Die Arbeit wurde im Januar 2004 mit dem Wissenschaftspreis des Deutschen Bundestages ausgezeichnet.

The Nice Treaty's Declaration on the future of the European Union has restated a fundamental issue: National parliaments and the European Parliament face a growing number of challenges which call their position as the direct legitimate representatives of the European Union's citizenry into question: They constantly have to adapt and adjust the possibilities and arrangements for parliamentary involvement in response to Community legislation and Union action. The major question posed by this study is how the European Parliament and the national parliaments "acclimatise" to common challenges, constraints and opportunities for which they are mainly responsible themselves. The study examines different ways to democratise the EU. The study reveals a dynamic European Parliament which is taking up a major challenge with respect to its role as the representative arena of citizens' concerns. Moreover, it shows that the overall majority of national parliaments have been slow adapters. The effective use of parliamentary provisions with regard to the participation in EU affairs have not converged into one uniform model. Thus, it is extremely difficult to suggest blueprints for an optimal model for parliamentary involvement in EU affairs. The increased importance of EU affairs will lead to stronger and direct participation of national parliaments at EU level and this will affect the basic way in which national governments and parliaments function in general. It might not be wrong to call upon the European Parliament and the national parliaments to strengthen their interparliamentary network for multi-level scrutiny. However, roles and functions should be allocated appropriately: The realisation of a new multi-dimensional web of interparliamentary contacts might help reduce the democratic deficit in institutional - parliamentary - terms. Nevertheless, one should bear in mind that the "end-users" of public policy outcomes - the Union's citizens - are not that familiar with the institutional mechanisms. It will therefore still be up to the actors involved to offer appropriate means for the participation of the European Union's citizens in shaping the conditions for their way of living. The simple formalisation of COSAC or any other joint body incorporating MEPs and MPs within the framework of a new Treaty or constitution will also render the EU more complex and less transparent. The Convention on the Future of the EU should therefore explore appropriate avenues for a more coherent and clear-cut organisation of interest representation and mediation in an enlarged European Union. The study has received the Science Award of the German Bundestag for 2003 and 2004.
