The Eggplant Cancer Cure: A Treatment For Skin Cancer And New Hope For Other Cancers From Nature's Pharmacy

Synopsis

Perfection or near-perfection is rare in any area of medicine. Dr. Bill Cham has achieved it in the treatment of two common cancers, basal cell carcinoma and squamous cell carcinoma. Dr. Cham's treatment also eliminates actinic keratosis, a usually benign (but potentially malignant) skin condition of middle ages and older. What's near-perfection? A treatment that:

- Works nearly every time
- Has no adverse side effects
- Is inexpensive compared with other treatments

According to a recent story from the Associated Press, government advisers to the Institute of Medicine are warning that the U.S. is facing a crisis in cancer care. The risk of cancer increases with age, they said, and by 2030, new cases are expected to reach 2.3 million a year. They predict there may be a shortage of oncology specialists to care for all of them. Of the 13 new cancer treatments approved by the FDA last year, only one was shown to extend survival by more than a median of six months. (Is that really extending life or just prolonging death?) The drugs all cost more than $5,900 per month and that doesn't include doctor and hospital bills, surgeries, treatments, or caretakers. It may be even worse since the studies used to test the different therapies didn't include enough people over 65 who tend to have other health problems in addition to cancer. Part of the problem is the complexity of the treatments, according to the report, which often involve genetic testing to determine which tumors are most likely to respond to which therapy. One would think that a totally new way to cure cancer would be welcomed with jubilation and relief, but as is often the case, if the research comes from an outsider and is not based on some new drug, it is often overlooked. Now for the good news! There is already a cure for some cancers. An old folk remedy for skin cancer has been proven to be effective, not just for eliminating the cancer, but actually replacing it with healthy tissue, leaving not even a scar to show where it had been. Many plants in the same family as the common eggplant contain a chemical called solasodine glycoside, or BEC5. When applied topically, the compound causes apoptosis (spontaneous death) in cancer cells, effectively causing them to commit suicide. Only cancerous cells have receptors for the compound so it does not affect normal cells; it searches out and destroys only the rogues. Even those who have been severely disfigured regrow missing tissue exactly as it was originally. No safety risks have been identified with the treatment. Dr. Bill E. Cham started researching his eggplant cure in 1979. He was inspired by stories from cattle ranchers in Queensland, Australia who raised Herefords, a black and white breed with white spots around the eyes. Queensland has the highest level of UV radiation in the world and the highest incidence of skin cancer. Eye cancers, called ocular squamous cell carcinomas, are a common problem in Hereford cattle in the region. A Brisbane veterinarian told Dr. Cham that the local cattlemen used the juice from the fruit of the "Devil's apple" plant to treat the cancers in their livestock. Dr. Cham developed a cream, called Curaderm, using the plant extract. He says the active ingredient is not like any current anti-tumor agent. Receptors for the chemical are present only on cancer cells and this explains why during treatment, the cancer cells are eliminated and replaced by normal cells without forming scar tissue. His treatment has undergone rigorous testing and by 2007, it had already cured about 70,000 cancer patients in Australia. Dr. Cham's published research shows that a twice daily application of Curaderm BEC5 to skin lesions resulted in a 78% success rate after 8 weeks of treatment and a 100% success rate after 12 weeks. I don't have to add a disclaimer to that statement, since he has multiple, gold-standard clinical trials to back it up. (Details are given in his book.) The treatment can cure squamous cell cancer, basal cell cancer, and actinic keratosis, but it has not yet been proved to be effective for melanoma and it may not work for skin cancers that have already been treated surgically. BEC5 is also recommended for use on pre-cancerous lesions, including age spots on the face and hands. It is currently undergoing clinical trials on humans with terminal internal cancers and for other health conditions. As you can imagine, Dr. Cham has faced many hurdles in trying to gain acceptance by the medical establishment and his treatment is still not widely known, although a recent appearance on the Dr. Oz show and a mention on Dr. Mercola's site may be changing that. Dr. Cham recommends that you consult a dermatologist for a diagnosis before using his product and to monitor your progress. His cream is very cheap compared to conventional treatment. Knock-off versions of the eggplant cure may be available online, but I suggest that you buy the tested product from him if you want to try it. If anybody deserves our support, it is this persistent and dedicated man who very well may hold the key to solving at least one part of our looming health care crisis. This review is an excerpt from one on the Carb Wars blog. Disclaimer: I have no interest in the company that makes the product mentioned above and have not received any free products or compensation.

This book (and the cream he recommends) helped avoid facial surgery. It removed all evidence of a small tumor on the nose, mostly without pain. It helps to have a dermatologist who is curious and willing to allow experimentation.

Very interesting. My husband used the eggplant cream rather than surgery on a skin cancer found by a dermatologist. It fell off in a couple of weeks, no scar, a fraction of the price of surgery.

Worth a read - illustrates the development and mechanism of an alternative treatment. Also shows how many potential therapies and drugs go undeveloped due to the profit motive. A valuable insight into an alternative to surgery practiced widely in Europe and Australia but virtually unknown in the United States.

So lucky I found this book. I had squamous cell carcinoma (skin cancer) on my face. Was scheduled for MOHs surgery. Cancelled the surgery appointment to try the eggplant cure method. I saved thousands of dollars and have no scars after using the eggplant cure. My skin cancer is gone. Thanks to Bill Cham.

This book is a must read if you are thinking of proceeding with the Curaderm Bec5 product. It is clear, concise and directs you to the research done on the product as well. Although much of the information is on the internet, I often went back to the book to check my progress when using the treatment. Short and to the point.

I work with skin cancers in my practice and there are only a few natural products that seem to work very well. As this book is about one of these (Curaderm) I am glad it is available to educate the public

This book/information is so very clear and rational and proves it's product. I am pursuing purchasing the product and I thank the author for sharing the information the system doesn't provide.
